Noodles & Company's off-premise capabilities and digital strength uniquely position the brand to meet the needs of today's fast casual environment and take advantage of long-term consumer trends. With attractive unit economics, evidenced by the company's recent openings marking the company's most successful new restaurant class in history, Noodles & Company plans to accelerate new unit growth in the years to come. To support the planned growth Noodles & Company recently hired a vice president of franchise development, John Ramsay, who has tremendous franchise experience and is bolstering the brand's franchise partnership efforts.

"Noodles is well positioned and primed for an aggressive franchise growth strategy," said Ramsay. "As a leader in the fast-casual space, Noodles & Company stands out to franchise partners because we offer an innovative menu, a competitive investment, and a brand that's really unlike any other. Further differentiating the Noodles franchise opportunity is our successful model for off-premise dining, distinctive store designs featuring smaller footprint units, pickup windows for digital orders where feasible, more efficient value-engineered equipment packages and streamlined operational procedures. The brand has successfully demonstrated its ability to adapt and is perfectly suited for today's consumer environment."

Noodles & Company is actively seeking qualified multi-unit franchise partners. Applicants must possess a passion for the brand, have strong business acumen and proven restaurant industry success. Experienced restaurateurs will receive support from a tenured team of restaurant professionals in areas including real estate, construction, design, operation support, marketing, and training.

"Further strengthening the value of Noodles and opportunity for new franchise partners, the restaurants that we have opened over the past two years have been our best performing vintage of restaurants in the company's history," said Ramsay.
